

Will Hackman

Will Hackman is a second-year, part-time MPP student. Will developed a passion for ocean conservation after spending summers in college as a commercial Alaskan salmon fisherman and a winter as a Bering Sea crab fisherman. During the '10 and '12 election cycles, Will served as a political fundraiser and campaign manager on four federal races for the U.S. House and Senate as well as a gubernatorial. In 2013, Will joined the public sector conservation community as a marine fisheries conservation advocate. Since then, he has closely worked on federal legislative issues related to domestic and international fisheries conservation as well as federal public lands conservation and clean energy projects. At Georgetown, Will founded and serves as the President of the McCourt school's Energy and Environmental policy student organization (McCourt E&E), he serves as the graduate student representative to the Steering Committee of the Georgetown Environment Initiative, he directs the Young Professionals Board of the Sustainable Oceans Alliance, and Will has an academic specialization in energy, environmental and climate change policy. Will has a Bachelor's degree in International Relations from Bradley University in Illinois.
